Major media distort eye-witness accounts of Aleppo's liberated inhabitants

During the past six years of war, Western media like ARD and ZDF have almost exclusively been reporting about the events in Syria from their studios in Cairo, Egypt. In December 2016, after East Aleppo was liberated by Syria's army and its allies, journalists from ARD and ZDF - amongst others - went into the war zone and interviewed liberated hostages. Finally, on December 7, 2016, authentic voices of the freed inhabitants were heard for a brief moment after weeks of disinformation and war propaganda.

The eye-witness reports were diametrically opposed to all the media broadcasts from the years before. "They (the rebels) forced us to live by the Sharia." Or: "They (the rebels) hid amongst us and used us as human shields."

In addition, the liberated people praised President Assad. Yet these statements and images were immediately glossed over. Delusive comments by media host's distorted things to look as if the people were acting in fear of Assad.

Accordingly, ZDF reporter Uli Gack said, "They (the liberated inhabitants of Aleppo) are in fear of the liberators' revenge because they might be suspected of collaboration."

By this the media revealed their true motives and their anything but impartial role.

Reports by Western media about Mossul and Aleppo present exactly the opposite of reports from eye-witnesses on site.

British journalist Vanessa Beeley sums up: "The reconquest of Aleppo reveals the media sham during the last four years, which made the civilian misery even worse because it prevented Syria's government and its troops from evacuating the civilians."

It is imperative to expose this media sham and to bring to light unaltered eye-witness accounts.

Present wars can be stopped like this and future wars prevented!
