

Turkey caught in the “Divide and Rule” strategy

Swiss historian and peace researcher professor Dr. Daniele Ganser is well known for his numerous presentations in which he explains the various background information on world politics. Professor Ganser repeatedly ventured to report on various countries. But, according to Ganser, there is one topic he has been avoiding for months, or even years. That is anything concerning the country of Turkey. The reason is that it is such a complex subject, which can be looked at from so many different perspectives. He has spoken with many Turkish, Kurdish, and Syrian people and in the end the situation remains unclear because each view is a “perspective view” as the German Philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche put it. In other words: on the subject of Turkey you cannot do justice to all sides.

In the following approximately two hour lecture, which Prof. Ganser held on June 3rd, 2017 at the University of Cologne, Germany, he quite expanded the scope of this subject. In detail Ganser illustrated the central themes in world politics, so that by this Turkey’s position can be better understood. Amongst other things, he addresses the topics: Turkey’s NATO admission in 1952, the CIA putsch 1980, 9/11 and the war on terror, the attempted coup de Etat in 2016 and the relations between the USA, the Kurds and the Saudis.

Professor Ganser does not give answers here but instead gives an overview of the biggest, most important aspects which are noteworthy in connection with Turkey - so that every one can form his own opinion.

Daniele Ganser points out, again and again that the “divide and rule” strategy - in which Turkey finds itself - can only be overcome when humans understand that they are all one big human family. Professor Ganser ended his presentation notably with the following quote from Mohammed, the founder of Islam: “Shall I tell you what is better than fasting, prayer and charity? It is achieving reconciliation.”
